RESEARCH

Areas of expertise

Applied microeconometrics, economics of education, labor economics, public economics

Publications

“Voting Rights and the Resilience of Black Turnout,” Economic Inquiry, forthcoming

The Voting Rights Act of 1965 increased turnout among Black voters, which then generated economic benefits for Black communities. In Shelby County v. Holder (2013), the Supreme Court invalidated the enforcement mechanism responsible for these improvements, prompting concerns that states with histories of discriminatory election practices would respond by suppressing Black turnout. I estimate the effect of the Shelby decision on the racial composition of the electorate using triple-difference comparisons of validated turnout data from the Cooperative Congressional Election Study. The data suggest that the Shelby decision did not widen the Black-white turnout gap in states subject to the ruling.

Working papers

Job market paper: “Does the Salience of Race Mitigate Gaps in Disciplinary Outcomes? Evidence from School Fights,” under review (with Glen Waddell)

Racial gaps in schools’ disciplinary actions are well documented—for similar behaviors, students of color are more likely to be disciplined and discipline tends to be harsher. Using incident-level data, we identify differential treatment across the racial composition of incidents. While students of color receive harsher punishments on average, we show that this differential is driven by incidents without white students. Consistent with administrators correcting biases when cues for equal treatment are more salient, multiracial incidents evidence no differentials—when a white student is implicated in the same incident, punishments imposed on students of color are indistinguishable from those of white students.
